

Can teamwork take the guesswork and worry out of health care? We think so.

An illness is stressful enough. Throw in dealing with insurance, taking care of a family, juggling work and treatment, and keeping up with appointments and suddenly that same illness can be overwhelming. But there is help through a community-based team of patient advocates called Care Consultants. Working with patients, their families and physicians, these dedicated Aurora Health Care professionals make living with a diagnosis, and all that goes along with it, a whole lot easier. They look at each patient and their individual needs, then connect them with help throughout Aurora and elsewhere in the community. From helping coordinate doctors' appointments, to sorting out medical and insurance information, to making connections with counselors or helping with housing, Care Consultants are by your side.

It's more than case management. It's creating community. It's holding a hand. It's caring about every aspect of a patient's life.
